Dalles, Texas, July 13.—A most horrible tragedy has just occurred at the National Hotel, in which two of the most prominent young men of Dallas evidently fought a duel to the death. W. H. Beale and Bowie Strange are both lying dead in a room in the third story of the hotel. Strange is partially dressed and Beale stripped, except his drawers, showing that they were about to retire for the night. The pistol of each is lying by his side. Both appear to be shot through the heart. The doors also, through the heart. The doors to the third suite of rooms were locked and your correspondent and Mr. W. J. Dial had to break them in to effect an entrance, being the first parties to arrive on the tragic scene.

Their duel is shrouded in mystery. They were devoted friends, but are said to have had hard words a few minutes before the tragedy. At 12:25 the report of the pistols was heard, and the announcement of the deaths have created a profound sensation and hundreds of people are congregated in the streets. The killing of no other two young men in Dallas in such a tragic manner could have created more regret or excitement.

In the case of J. H. Carlton and others against the Southern Mutual Insurance Company of Athens, the Supreme Court of Georgia recently decided that the company should only retain out of the accumulated funds now held by it interest amounting to about $1,000,000 a sufficient amount for the conduct of its business, and that the balance should be divided among all who have held policies at any time in that company, who should present their claims. It would be advisable for all persons who hold or have at any time held policies, or who represent deceased persons who have held policies, to communicate with the undersigned who represent the parties in this case claiming a flyision.
